Parliamentarians Monitor Macedonian Elections

"The citizens of this country have achieved a successful electoral process which could represent a major step towards restoring stability, reconciliation and democracy in the country. The small number of extremists responsible for violence during the past few weeks and days must not be allowed to jeopardize this achievement", said Kimmo Kiljunen, Vice President of the OSCE PA and Special Co-ordinator of the OSCE Chairman-in-Office to lead the OSCE Observation Mission during the Macedonian parliamentary elections on 15 September 2002.

The observation mission included more than 40 parliamentarians from the OSCE Parliamentary Assembly as well as parliamentarians from the Council of Europe and the European Parliament. Among the positive aspects of the electoral process highlighted by the international observers were the new election system adopted earlier this year, the exemplary work of the State Election Commission, as well as the electoral campaign, which was well organized and appropriately policed. However, the observers also expressed concern about a number of violent incidents which at times marred the election campaign and created a tense atmosphere. These incidents included the killing of police officers, hostage-taking, and attacks on party offices and media representatives. While the media as a whole offered a wide range of information and views, the state media coverage of the campaign was biased in favour of the incumbents. Election day was characterized by a high turnout of voters, few and isolated incidents of violence, and in general an orderly process.
