OSCE PA's Fry and Cederfelt address Summit of Women Speakers of Parliament

Hedy Fry addressing the Summit of Women Speakers of Parliament by video link, 6 Sept.

OSCE PA President Margareta Cederfelt (Sweden) and Special Representative on Gender Issues Hedy Fry (Canada) addressed the 13th Summit of Women Speakers of Parliament on Monday.

Special Representative Fry opened Session One, pointing out that COVID has shown how women are essential in every way, noting that they have worked in often difficult and dangerous conditions throughout the pandemic. Fry gave particular recognition to women in the health care sector, as well as grocery workers and other essential professions with a high proportion of women, and noted that unpaid work such as home care increased exponentially during the pandemic.

Fry pointed out that although they are clearly essential, women continue to be underrepresented at the upper levels of decision making. As parliamentarians and policymakers, it is important to incorporate the interests of women and to always remember principles of inclusiveness and intersectionality, Fry said.

Speaking on the topic of gender-based violence, President Cederfelt highlighted the Taliban's recent takeover of Afghanistan as an example of the sorts of threats women and girls continue to face. "The collapse of Afghanistan is a cold and painful reminder that in many parts of the world, women remain in a precarious situation," Cederfelt said. The challenge of violence against women is a threat to society as a whole, the President pointed out, and therefore it is necessary to address it head on through co-ordinated efforts.

The session that Cederfelt spoke at was moderated by former OSCE PA President Christine Muttonen.

Parliamentary contributions to conflict resolution highlighted at Annual Security Review Conference

OSCE PA High-Level Expert Lamberto Zannier represented the Assembly at the OSCE's Annual Security Review Conference last week, focusing his remarks on parliamentary contributions to early warning, conflict prevention, crisis management, conflict resolution and post-conflict rehabilitation.

Highlighting several examples of the added value of the OSCE PA's engagement in the conflict cycle, Ambassador Zannier stressed that the work of parliamentarians complements the role of the OSCE's executive structures by fostering direct engagement of participating States through their parliamentary delegations. This complementarity, he emphasized, should be better recognized and should ideally lead in the future to even stronger co-ordination between the different components of the OSCE, in full respect of existing mandates.

Zannier addressed working session four, held on 2 September, along with speakers from the Ukrainian Women's Congress, the UN and the OSCE. It was moderated by Amb. Tuula Yrjölä, Director of the OSCE's Conflict Prevention Centre.
