

OSCE PA delegation discusses environmental issues in Uzbekistan, visits Aral Sea

OSCE PA delegation at the Ministry of Ecology, Environmental Protection and Climate Change in Tashkent, 11 April 2024

An OSCE PA delegation led by Special Representative on Central Asia Farah Karimi (Netherlands) was in Uzbekistan last week with the aim of strengthening regional co-operation and inter-parliamentary dialogue. Wrapping up a three-country tour of Central Asia, the Uzbekistan leg included a visit to the Aral Sea, which has lost 90 per cent of its size since the 1960s in what is considered one of the planet's worst environmental disasters. In meetings with governmental representatives, parliamentary leaders and academics, the delegation learned about the efforts made by Uzbekistan and the four other Central Asian republics to counter the adverse effects of desertification in the Aral Sea region, improve biodiversity, and strengthen climate change resilience.

It was Karimi's first visit to Uzbekistan in her capacity as OSCE PA Special Representative on Central Asia. She was joined by OSCE PA Second Committee Rapporteur Gudrun Kugler (Austria) and Special Representative on Climate Change Pere Joan Pons (Spain), as well as Ainur Argynbekova and Dilorom Fayzieva, members of parliament from Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan, respectively.

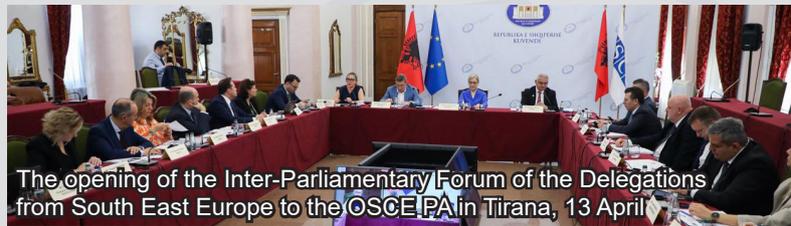

The 11-12 April visit to Uzbekistan followed stops in Turkmenistan and Kazakhstan, and was intended to support the engagement of delegations of Central Asia in the activities of the OSCE PA, to ensure that the OSCE PA understands the issues important to Central Asia, to learn from the region's experience, and to facilitate co-operation to address shared challenges.
