Speaking at the Fourth Meeting of Speakers of Eurasian Countries' Parliaments in Nur-Sultan, OSCE PA President George Tsereteli (MP, Georgia) said Tuesday that the fulfillment of international commitments and obligations is a pre-condition for honest dialogue, genuine trust, and stronger partnerships for peace and sustainable development. The meeting, hosted by the Parliament of Kazakhstan, was held under the theme "Greater Eurasia: Dialogue. Trust. Partnership" and brought together parliamentary leaders from 65 countries. President Tsereteli was accompanied in Nur-Sultan by OSCE PA Vice-President Pascal Allizard (MP, France).

In his statement, President Tsereteli highlighted the need to pursue dialogue on controversial issues, including the need to hold elections in line with democratic principles, promoting media freedom and defending journalists, safeguarding the environment and protecting biodiversity, encouraging trade and sustainable economic development, or enhancing effective migration governance.

During the conference, Tsereteli and Allizard met with Mazhilis Chairman Nurlan Nigmatulin and Senate Chairwoman Dariga Nazarbayeva, who serves as the Head of Kazakhstan's Delegation to the OSCE PA. Tsereteli also exchanged with Kazakhstan's First President Nursultan Nazarbayev. The conversations underlined Kazakhstan's long-standing commitment and contributions to international dialogue and to the effectiveness of the OSCE and its Institutions, including through good co-operation with the OSCE Programme Office in Nur-Sultan.

"Kazakhstan continues to play a unique role in the OSCE through its readiness to contribute to conflict resolution, to promote peaceful relations, and to boost economic development. When we address sensitive and critical topics, we all understand there can be no substitute to frank and honest dialogue," said Tsereteli. "In that respect, it is important to note Kazakhstan's continued willingness to overcome shortcomings and work together with its international partners in good spirit."
